

CHOICE, FREEDOM PROTECTION

No one can buy immunity from breast cancer.

It doesn't respect the boundaries of age, wealth
or physical fitness.

CHOICE, FREEDOM + PROTECTION

One in 11 Australian women will be diagnosed with breast cancer before turning 75<sup>1</sup>, and while the risks are high the good news is that survival rates are improving. 84% of women diagnosed with breast cancer during 1992 and 1997 survived for five or more years after diagnosis, and many are now living normal, healthy lives<sup>2</sup>.

Breast cancer isn't an easy thing to talk about, but it's important to consider how you would create the financial freedom you might want and need if you were diagnosed.

Critical illness insurance can put the control in your hands by providing an instant lump sum of cash upon diagnosis of a wide range of illnesses, including cancer, heart disease and stroke. Having that sort of financial freedom can help you make a better recovery and allow you to make lifestyle improvements for you and your family.
